

Course description

English is an essential tool for any lawyer working with international matters. It is the lingua franca of the legal profession, of business and international affairs.

Employers need to know that the legal staff they appoint have a sufficient level of English to be able to communicate with clients and professionals in other countries, and to handle information written in English.

At the same time, law students and newly-qualified lawyers need to be able to show employers that they have these skills. The new Cambridge ILEC - International Legal English Certificate - was created to meet these needs.

Who is the course for?

ILEC is for law students, practising lawyers and legal secretaries who are seeking employment in an international legal setting. It is also ideal for translators of legal documents.

This includes law students who are:

- seeking employment in an international commercial law context, e.g. law firms, company legal departments, and government agencies;
- intending to study law where the course includes a significant English language content, either in their own country or abroad.

It includes practising lawyers and legal secretaries who are:

- seeking new employment in an international commercial law context;
- seeking promotion within their own organisations;
- learning English as part of a training programme.

Furthermore, it aids legal employers with the hiring and training of personnel, and law faculties and language schools with the selection, placement and graduation of their students.

The level of English required will be First Certificate or above as the examination will be of Advanced English level (between First Certificate and Proficiency).
